Did you Know?

Connecticut law prohibits discrimination based on gender, gender identity, gender diversity, and gender expression in various settings, including education, employment, and housing.

In Connecticut each K-12 school district is required to have policies and procedure for responding to child sexual abuse and assault.

Connecticut also requires each school to have its own Title IX Coordinator.

Unfortunately in Connecticut 14% of residents report that they have personally experienced childhood sexual assault.

Reporting an Incident

An individual can report a Title IX violation in a variety of different ways. An individual can file a report with the Title IX coordinator, or discuss an incident with a teacher, school administrator or other employee.

In other cases, a student, parent, or other individual can contact other appropriate school employee, such as a principal, campus security, bus driver, teacher, affirmative action officer, or staff in the office of student affairs, or other school employee.

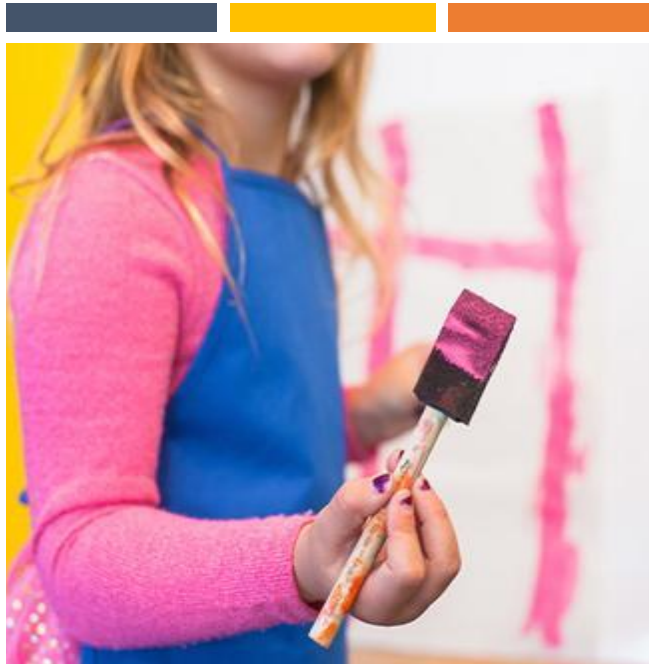

Individuals can also report potential violations in-person, or by written complaint, by filing an online report or by telephone. Do note, reports can be filed anonymously.

Can you file an appeal on a Title IX decision?

Yes, in many cases schools typically allow individuals to appeal Title IX outcomes on certain grounds. To find out more information about this process contact your Title IX Coordinator.

Why does a focus on prevention matter?

A strong emphasis on mandatory training for all school employees and creating a positive school climate and culture can help encourage individuals to come forward and report any inappropriate or challenging behavior.
